1.0 Mission and Objectives

A mission statement outlines the purpose of an institution or program, and provides clear direction for the ongoing development and operation of the institution or program. In developing and revising a mission statement, an institution or program should consider the needs of society, the profession and the students for whom the program is intended. Programs within larger institutions should have a mission that is congruent with the larger institution. The mission statement may be defined in a broad or narrow sense, and should be supported by specific measurable educational objectives for each educational program. The mission statement and educational objectives should be reviewed regularly and revised as needed to ensure that they are up-to-date.

2.0 Curriculum and Instruction

The curriculum is the plan for student learning, designed to achieve the mission and educational objectives of the program. While the educational objectives of different programs may be very similar, the curriculum itself may vary widely due to differing principles and values in both the content area and educational philosophy. For example, institutions may determine the length of programs, select textbooks and other course materials, choose particular teaching philosophies, or elect to have an externship experience. However, in all cases the curriculum should be designed to meet licensing and credentialing requirements for practitioners in the field in the jurisdiction in which the program exists. The curriculum should be thought-out, systematic and detailed to provide a clear outline for faculty to follow. It includes the general outline of required courses for successful completion of the program, as well as specific course syllabi, class lesson plans and the assessment tools used to evaluate student learning. The curriculum should be regularly reviewed and revised as needed to ensure that it is up-to-date. These revisions should take into consideration feedback from a wide variety of sources. Instruction takes into consideration the variety of learning styles, abilities and experiences. Classes are designed to provide opportunities for students to actively engage with the course content. The teaching methods are appropriate for the course content, and may include a wide variety of techniques such as lecture, discussion, demonstrations, small group work or individual study. Courses may be offered in a variety of formats such as traditional classrooms, lab, externship or distance education, so long as the format is appropriate for the course content and objectives.

Furthermore, instructors of program specific theory and technique courses (such as massage technique or massage theory) must have credentials to practice professionally. Faculty members are expected to engage in on-going professional development. Professional development in technical knowledge and skills can be accomplished in a variety of ways, such as through work sabbaticals, part-time field employment or professional meetings and conferences. Professional development in instructional theory and skills can be accomplished through means such as formal education courses, in-service, observation of experienced teachers or participation in educational workshops. Institutions and programs should have clearly outlined policies for faculty orientation, on-going professional development and faculty evaluation. Faculty evaluation should include feedback from both supervisory staff and from students.

7.0 Student Records and Progress

Institutions and programs should maintain records of and monitor students' progress through the program. Students should be informed of expected performance standards, and should receive regular reports of their progress in the program. Records of students' attendance, progress and completion should be accurate, organized, confidential, and maintained in a safe place. Institutions and programs located in the United States should follow the regulations outlined in the federal Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), as well as any other jurisdictional regulations. Institutions and programs offering any COMTA accredited program must have a policy for determining what constitutes satisfactory academic progress throughout that program. Those institutions wishing to establish or maintain eligibility to administer United States Title IV financial aid programs are required to meet applicable government requirements in this area. Institutions and programs are expected to show that a high proportion of students successfully progress through their program, complete their program, and obtain employment in the field for which they have trained. Minimum acceptable completion, placement and licensure rates will be determined by the Commission based on previous years' reported results from accredited programs. The Commission will report the minimum acceptable rates following the fall Commission meeting each year.

9.0 Management

Management's primary role is to oversee the development, implementation and evaluation of an effective program. For programs within larger institutions, there must be evidence the management of the program is within the boundaries of the law and able to provide effective oversight of the program. Management should engage in on-going process of assessing effectiveness in meeting its mission and educational objectives. On a regular basis, institutions and programs should collect and analyze feedback from a variety of sources, including students, graduates, employers and other interested parties. This information should be used in revising educational offerings. Management should have short and long-term plans for the organization as a whole. The plan should include a review of past retention and placement rates, identification of trends, explanations for fluctuations, and goals set for the future, including planned actions to achieve those goals. The plan should include an evaluation of such things as physical facilities, staffing and program offerings, along with short-term and long-range plans. The plans need to include strategies, timelines and benchmarks. Management should have in place a structure and organization to allow for effective and efficient operation. There should be published lines of authority so that faculty, students, and administrators understand the channels for procedures.
